

This advertisement appeared in "The Magistrate's Guide", a book written by W. L. Sullivan and published in 1901, by Hodges, Figgis & Co.
ADVERTISEMENTS.

The Jammets Hotel and Restaurant,

ST. ANDREW STREET, DUBLIN.

MESSRS. JAMMET BROTHERS beg to draw the attention of the Nobility and Gentry of Ireland to the Opening of above Restaurant.

It is MESSRS. J.'s. intention to open and carry on this Establishment as a High-Class one, feeling assured that by their personal attention and First-Class Catering they will secure a large share of public patronage.

MR. M. JAMMET, who has had the honour to be Chef to His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant for the past nine years, will personally superintend, and will be ably assisted by his brother, MR. F. JAMMET, Proprietor of the Restaurant du Boef a la Mode, Rue de Valois, Palais Royal, Paris.

No expense has been spared in the fitting up of this Restaurant to ensure the comfort and convenience of its patrons, whose commands will always have the Proprietor's personal attention.

Table d'Hôte Lunch and Dinner a Speciality.

MESSRS. JAMMET BROTHERS respectfully solicit a share of your esteemed patronage, and thank you in anticipation.