Building Regulations are in a Terrible State, but I Have a Solution

Lorcan Sirr
Technological University Dublin, lorcan.sirr@tudublin.ie

Follow this and additional works at: https://arrow.tudublin.ie/beschrecmed

Part of the Urban, Community and Regional Planning Commons, and the Urban Studies and Planning Commons

Recommended Citation
Sirr, L. (2016) Building regulations are in a terrible state, but I have a solution. Sunday Times 03.04.2016.
Springing back into action with brisk sales

LINDA DAILY MARKET WATCH

Sharing accommodation can soften the pain of soaring rents and expand your social circle, but beware the house where hell islam.

P
and Norris has a host of stories to emanate to pare the 100 years he has spent house sharing. One time he shared with an appartment with "enough laughalin" in the attic and stacks of toilet paper in the bathroom, so when every now and then you might end up in the fabrick to remeber your clothes on the line in the bath room while the toilet was working.

"They were some funny houses, too, not just the one-on-one sharing," Norris did mention. "There was a lot of fun in them, but they were also a lot of work.
"You'd have to be there every day at 6pm to make sure no one was using the washing machine. The smell ema-in the water from the hot water cups would be left in the sink for days, and there'd be food poisoning from the unwashed dishes in the sink."

During those days, there were also a good many more houses that were not really houses but more like hotel rooms. "There were a lot of rooms that were just baskets in the middle of rooms, and you had to share a bathroom with three or four people."

"These were the days when the tenants were not really given any protection or rights, and it was harder to get anywhere with them."

"There were a lot of cases where the tenants were just being used by landlords who were renting them out in this way. It was a time when people were not really protected, and the landlords could get away with a lot."