2016-6

Time to Monitor Airbnb’s Impact on Dublin’s Housing Crisis

Lorcan Sirr
Technological University Dublin, lorcan.sirr@tudublin.ie

Follow this and additional works at: https://arrow.tudublin.ie/beschrecmed

Part of the Urban, Community and Regional Planning Commons, and the Urban Studies and Planning Commons

Recommended Citation

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the School of Surveying and Construction Management at ARROW@TU Dublin. It has been accepted for inclusion in Media by an authorized administrator of ARROW@TU Dublin. For more information, please contact yvonne.desmond@tudublin.ie, arrow.admin@tudublin.ie, brian.widdis@tudublin.ie.

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial-Share Alike 3.0 License
Graceful catmint is coming up to scratch

The plant species that drives all the felines crazy is robust and highly decorative—just keep away from their sharp claws.

Foxtails, in my opinion, are not the best plants to grow in a garden. But I am going to go against the grain of this seemingly unanimous opinion. In the garden of the world, the plant species that drives all the felines to get the last of the volatile oils from its stump. Nonetheless, it still attracts cats, releasing more of the narcotic chemical. Donment as they break the shoots to eat, and is largely untroubled by the felines. A drought-tolerant plant, Nepeta is a tough, dependable variety that is surely worth a place in your garden.

The plant is also of interest for its medicinal properties. It is used in traditional medicine to cure coughs and alleviate pain. However, it is not commonly found in medicinal gardens. Nepeta is a rare variety that is only available in select nurseries. It is a favorite of veterinarians and pet owners. It is also a popular herbal remedy for respiratory problems.

Grown for it

- Do n’t dig. Some gardeners prefer to let the plants go to seed and then let the seeds germinate naturally. This is a great way to propagate nepeta without buying expensive seeds.
- Potent plants. Nepeta is a potent plant, and it is used in traditional medicine to cure coughs and alleviate pain. However, it is not commonly found in medicinal gardens.
- A Saladwoman’s dream. Nepeta is a popular choice for salad gardens, and it is included in many gardeners’ lists of the best plants for marking the verge of a path or placing alongside a patio. It is also attractive to insects. So, if you plant Nepeta near your path, you will have a constant supply of nectar for your garden.

Grow it for

- N. cataria. This is the most common and easiest to grow nepeta variety. It is hardy, compact, and has a strong scent. It is also a good choice for cat lovers, as it is safe for cats to eat.
- N. x faassenii. This is a hybrid nepeta variety that is taller and more vigorous than N. cataria. It is also more fragrant and has a longer blooming season.
- N. x 'Six Hills Giant'. This is a large variety of nepeta that is perfect for creating a border or a large bed. It has large, showy flowers that attract bees and butterflies. It is also a good choice for adding height to your garden.

LORCAN SIRR

Grown in Dublin has a housing management team of 208,000 flats, more than 180,000 children, and nearly 270,000 tenants. More than one third of its tenants live in renton homes, including some in Dublin’s most disadvantaged areas. The company is dedicated to providing high-quality homes in the capital. In 2015, the company was rated the best in Ireland for providing homes for vulnerable groups.

Time to monitor Airbnb’s impact on Dublin’s housing crisis

A few weeks ago, I attended a conference in Belfast. I was there to discuss the housing crisis in Dublin, as well as how the government is tackling the issue. It was a lively discussion, with many debates and disagreements. At one point, I had to ask the audience to quiet down, as I couldn’t hear what was being said.

The conversation then turned to the impact of Airbnb on Dublin’s housing market. Many speakers raised concerns about the influence of the platform on the rental market. They highlighted the growing number of listings, the decrease in long-term rentals, and the increase in prices.

The speakers also pointed out the potential benefits of Airbnb, such as increased tourism and revenue. However, they emphasized the need for a balanced approach, where the interests of both tourists and residents are taken into account.

I was impressed by the level of discussion and the passion of the speakers. It was a valuable opportunity to learn about the challenges faced by Dublin’s housing market and to consider potential solutions. I look forward to attending more events like this in the future.