Overview of Professional Development Framework for all staff who teach in Higher Education & what we are learning from the Pilot Study Implementation (so far!)

Dr Roisin Donnelly & Dr Terry Maguire

Abstract

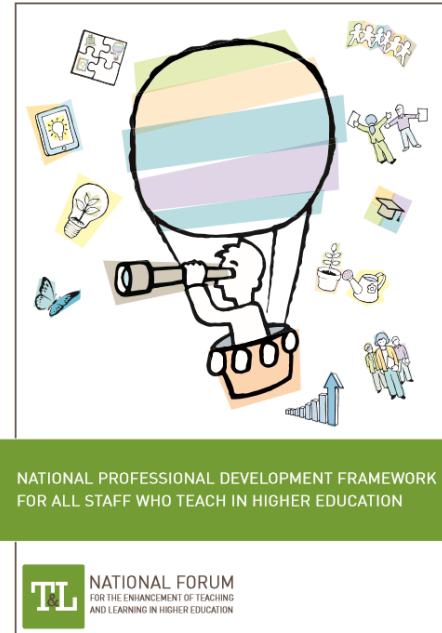

In higher education, we have become increasingly aware of the narrative of being part of a knowledge-based economy, and know there are strong, compelling reasons for continuous professional development (PD) to support our role as educators. For anyone who teaches and supports learning in Irish higher education, PD is fundamental for remaining current in their role, it provides the drive to progress their career, and to deal with change in the sector. Prior to 2016, there has not been a mechanism or route in place nationally to give structure, focus and support to individual academic staff to avail of relevant PD and utilise it to realise their full potential in their teaching role. Promisingly, there are more PD opportunities to choose from nowadays for those teaching in Irish HE than ever before, but negotiating the labyrinth can remain difficult.

This study discusses a key strand of the workplan of the National Forum (NF) for the Enhancement of Teaching and Learning - the formation and early implementation of the National Professional Development Framework (PDF) for all who teach in higher education (HE). This important work is leading towards national recognition of an individual's commitment to professionalism in teaching. By deepening sectoral understanding of the PDF itself and raising awareness of the recent pilot study implementation with staff who teach in universities, institutes of technology and private colleges, we are adding to the long-standing debate about the possible connections between professionalisation of teaching and improvements in student learning experiences and outcomes. We have structured the article using a series of questions, to highlight what is unique about this PD Framework, its underpinning values and distinctive domains.

Professional development is something we do every day of our lives without even thinking about it – do you agree?

we are challenged to change ourselves."

- Viktor Frankl

...however, as busy educators, it takes time to think about what we do, and why we do it, and how best to evidence and reflect on PD. How can we embark on PD and self-manage the process?

What is the National Forum's Framework for Professional Development (PD)?

to provide guidance for the PD of individuals and give direction to other stakeholders (e.g. institutions, higher education networks, educational/academic developers, policy makers and student body representatives) for planning, developing and engaging in professional development activities.

In Dec 2016, we extended an invitation to participate in a pilot implementation to the HE sector...

We wanted to engage with many professional identities as possible in the pilot project...

Academic staff across disciplines; learning technologists; educational developers; research staff; library staff; support staff...

Scope & Composition of PDF Pilot Studies

TLL NATIONAL FORUM
FOR THE ENHANCEMENT OF TEACHING
AND LEARNING IN HIGHER EDUCATION

Announcing the implementation of the pilot studies for the National Professional Development Framework (PDF)

Why are these PDF pilot studies being done?

The National Professional Development Framework (PDF) has been developed to support those who teach in Irish higher education with a mechanism for considering their own professional development journey. To implement the PDF across key professional identity contexts, a series of pilot studies are being conducted which will ultimately inform a professional development national recognition framework.

What do I have to do?

You will be invited to reflect on your professional development against the domains and elements of the PDF [<http://www.teachingandlearning.ie/wp-content/uploads/2016/09/PPD-Framework-FINAL.pdf>], and complete this in a portfolio. To support you in this process, you will be invited to attend a 'kickstarter' regional workshop, and there is a mentoring scheme embedded as part of the Pilot Studies.

PDF Pilot Study location(s)

A series of short interactive workshops will be run in the following locations to launch the PDF pilot study in each institution, and you are cordially invited to attend:

SUPPORTING THE PILOT STUDIES

MENTORING SCHEME FOR SUPPORT OF PD PILOT STUDIES

Introduction

The following materials will be available to the Pilot Co-ordinators via the Expert Mentors:

1. PD Pilots information leaflets.
2. Info video to share with pilot participants.

The discussions during the mentoring process can take into account:

3. Details of all other NF projects running.
4. Info on expenses to support this project if relevant.
5. Info on to access supports or resources, as well as time required on pilot.

Rationale

The mentoring scheme will be embedded as part of the Pilot Studies implementing the PDF across professional identity contexts for those who have a teaching role in the higher education sector. Involvement in this scheme is not intended to be a requirement, rather it is a form of guided support offered to pilot co-ordinators. In this context, what is proposed is a mentoring scheme where the role of the expert group mentor involves assisting and supporting the pilot co-ordinator to carry out their pilot study.

About PDF Pilot Studies

The National Forum for the Enhancement of Teaching and Learning in Higher Education (NF) funds this 12-month project which commenced on 1st November 2016. The Project Manager works closely with the PD Expert Advisory Group which has a representative from NUIG, UL, LIT, DKIT, Griffith College, RCSI, HECA colleges, IT Tralee, and Maynooth University; in addition, colleagues from CIT and IADT are involved in hosting and co-ordinating a pilot study each. The PDF pilot studies which are spread across the higher education sector, with universities, IoTs and private colleges including a teacher education institution, share a commitment to empower staff to create, discover and engage in meaningful personal and professional development in a variety of ways.

LEAFLET – FOR PARTICIPANTS

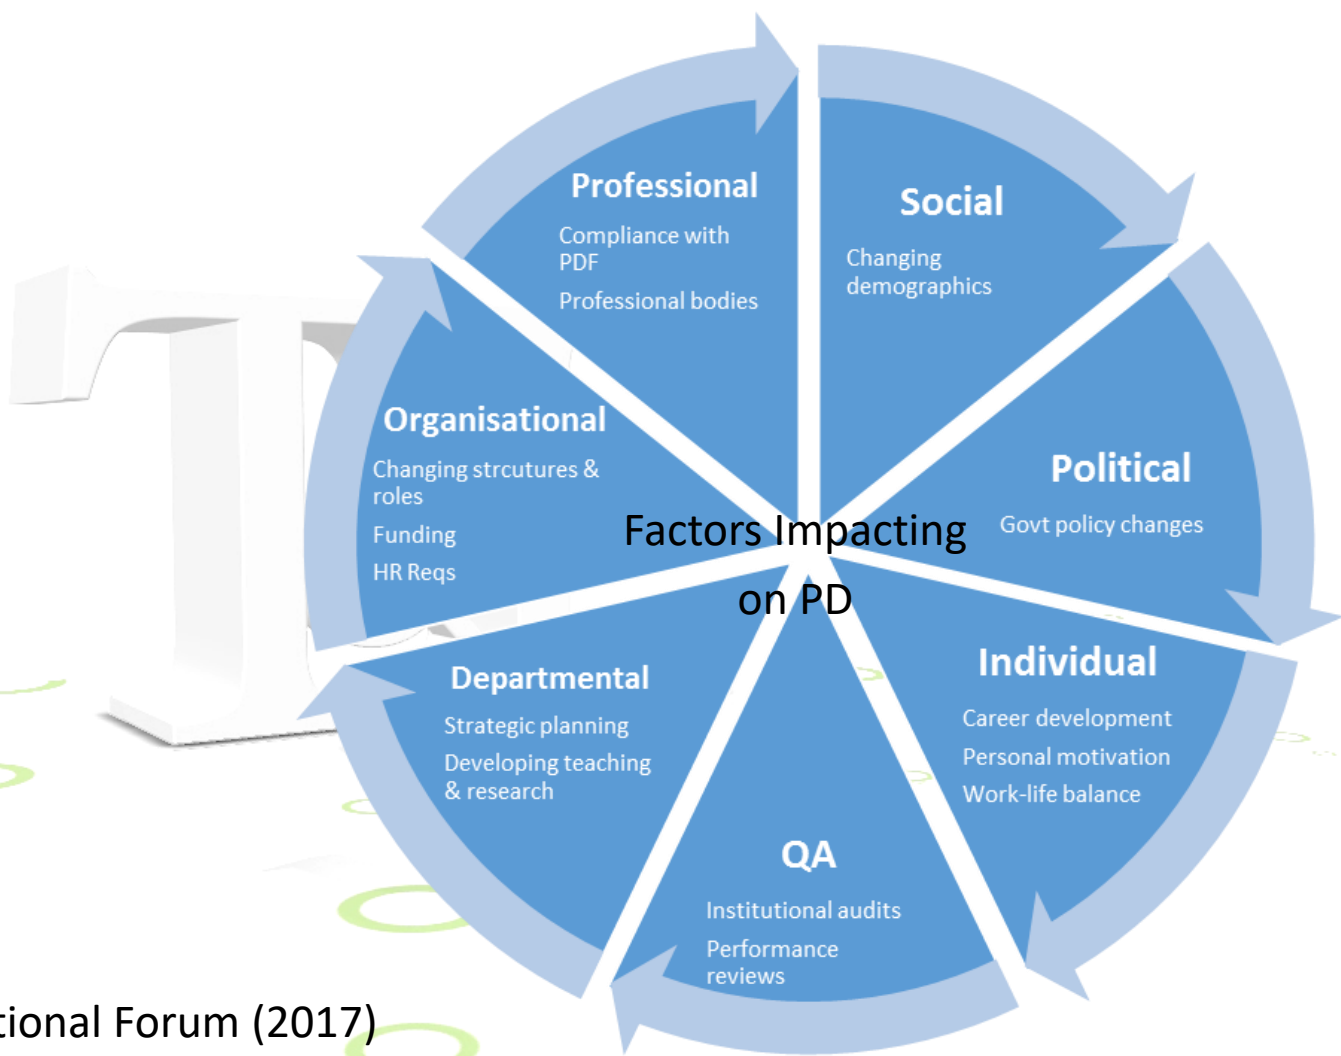

Introduction

Since 2013, the National Forum for the Enhancement of Teaching and Learning in Higher Education has been working towards the development of a nationally-recognised framework for capturing successful practice within teaching and learning support across the higher education sector. The National Professional Development Framework (PDF) has been developed to support those who teach with a mechanism for considering their own professional development through a structured process of reflecting on, planning, gathering evidence and validating their professional development. This is based on the belief that the National PDF is essential to driving improvement in, and raising the profile of learning and teaching in Irish higher education. As such, the National Forum has been consulting with the sector for some time in preparation for the formation of a Professional Recognition Framework for the future.

Providing opportunities for professional development that could lead to career progression for all who teach¹ in higher education is front and centre of a pilot study implementation strategy that is currently being initiated to support this process. Throughout the first half of 2017, we have decided to conduct a series of pilot studies to trial the PDF in institutions – and it is a very exciting project! These pilot studies which are led by the National Forum as part of ongoing development of the National PDF, aim to explore the processes and tools that are used to implement and evaluate the PDF for all those who teach in Irish higher education.

LAUNCH OF HECA MANUAL

I would now like to introduce Dr Teresa Whitaker, who is a member of the Teaching and Learning Committee [sub-committee of HECA], chaired by Anne Mangan.

Teresa will talk to you about an open access, digital resource that they have developed for new teachers in independent Higher Education Institutions in Ireland.
