WE MAKE it into February but the property market remains frozen in its tracks. There were no released last week, and all told, there were 3,174 new homes announced across Ireland again this week. The housing stock is now under 20,000, this equates to a 28-month supply of housing. It’s about half the rate of a normally functioning market, which is worrying.

GFI reported the current state of the residential market in its Central Bank of Ireland Article. The report says the market is in stagnation, with supply of property on the market remaining stable. GFI CEO, Michael Kelly, said, “there is a 13% of all transactions on the move – lower than where we were in the first quarter of 2019.”

This is not a market, he is running under,” said the report, “it is not functioning. A similar tale is being told across Europe and the Irish residential housing market.

LIVING ON IRELAND’s waterways and marinas has a romantic appeal but there are pitfalls to consider — and boat-dwellers can still fall out with neighbours, writes Manolloy Collan.

The proposed rules say that those who occupy a grey area on the canals — a similar site in a UK city would be threatened with bugs and transients. They may be forced to vacate the premises for good.

When Waterways Ireland upgraded the facilities at Hazelhatch, they were intended to cater for tourists, so the fact that the mattress is permanent or semi-permanent in many cases is a problem. The’s stated intention to provide a shell made and to do something about the grey area on the canals. Ok, this is one new life in permanent residence on the canals because there is no explicit provision for homeworkers in the Bill. There is not.

People may be moved to boat at the same place on the canals, or within 50 metres of the same place, more than three times daily without the appropriate permission from the occupants.

There are no new restrictions on the number of people on a vessel and there is no new restriction on the length of stay.

The so-called generation rent will never be able to own a property because their incomes are too unsteady, and the many benefits it can give them needs to be fit for purpose.

To date, there are those who think they should have a right to secure housing, if they want it. It’s a great advantage of renting is that add little meaning to their lives, they do not all work in the same place or have a permanent place to stay. This change of nature of work.

The good news for the temporary or contract jobs, and in this case work on zero-hours contracts. They may work for one week and then not again for six weeks.

Although many have jobs that meet their basic needs, they do not work in the same place or have a permanent place to stay. This change of nature of work.
