LINDA DAILY MARKET WATCH

Tenants get more certainty at last

Housing measures are finally here. Alan Kelly (the environment minister for housing) has announced plans to introduce measures to improve the lives of renters, including a new tenancy tenancy, longer notice periods for evictions, and measures to reduce the cost of building an apartment in Ireland.

The new measures will be introduced as part of a broader package of reforms to the housing market. The government has also announced plans to introduce a new tenure classification for renters, which will provide greater security of tenure and longer notice periods for evictions.

Kelly said that the new measures were essential to address the needs of tenants and to ensure that the housing market worked for all.

The new measures will come into effect in the New Year, and the government is urging landlords and tenants to work together to ensure a smooth transition.

Fresh price drop in Dublin

A fresh price drop has been announced in Dublin, with a significant reduction in the asking price of a property on a corner street.

Two years ago, when the property was first put on the market, it was being sold for €600,000. However, after negotiations with the vendor, the price was reduced to €450,000.

The property is a three-bedroom detached house located in a quiet residential area, with a large garden and parking space.

The reduction in price is significant, and it will make the property more attractive to potential buyers.

The agent responsible for selling the property said that the reduction was due to the current market conditions, and that the vendor was keen to sell the property quickly.

The property is located within walking distance of local shops and schools, and is also close to public transport routes.

The agent is urging interested buyers to act quickly, as the property is expected to sell quickly.

The new price is expected to be attractive to buyers who were previously deterred by the high asking price of the property.

In the meantime, the agent is encouraging potential buyers to visit the property and to arrange a viewing appointment.

The property is currently available for viewing on weekdays and weekends, and interested parties are advised to contact the agent for more details.

The agent is confident that the property will sell quickly, and that interested buyers should not delay in making an offer.

They say: “The price reduction is significant, and it will make the property more attractive to potential buyers. It is an excellent opportunity for interested buyers to secure a property in a sought-after location.”
