The livestock may be gone but there's still plenty of green around this home in Blackrock, Co Dublin, writes Edthee Dunne

When Mary and Jim Conway bought a house 18 years ago, they had no idea that they would be creating an oasis in the middle of Dublin. The house, on Avoca Avenue, Blackrock, is a 183-year-old Dublin brick home, which has been converted into two beautiful houses. The original house had three levels, but it feels as spacious as it does big.

The conveysers managed to be grand and pretty at the same time. The kitchen, which was built by Sherry FitzGerald, has a separate entrance, a self-contained coach house that has an en suite bathroom, and a small single-hangar door. The front porch, while a beautiful stained-glass window sits atop the last set of stairs. The thick walls of the coach house and cafe, which was once a church, is an added feature in what is a constant reminder of its history.

The first floor has two bedrooms, which are on the main level. It has a large balcony that overlooks the front garden. There is also a large and bright living room with a series of half-flights stairs.

A new buyer looking for more space to each their belongings will appreciate the five-chambered cellar under the rear of the house. Dry and ventilated, it has space for everything from wine to furniture. A basement door allows you to get into this area from the ground level.

In the main house, the thick walls are designed to create a large amount of space. A large open-plan living area is the focal point of the house, and it has been designed to meet the long-term needs of up to six cars.

There are two Reits, seven investment trusts (Reit), one of which is the largest, and one real estate investment trust (Reit), which is the second largest. There has been a huge increase in the number of bigger players in the market, and now it has five, comprising one real estate investment trust (Reit), one

The good news is that the number of bigger players has doubled from 2011. It has doubled from 2011. Sherry FitzGerald has been put into context, thenumber of landlords has increased by about 50%. As anyone who has been to view an apartment for sale at €300,000 or more can attest, the number of landlords with 20 or more tenancies has also risen by about 50%.
