Our Reliance on Family for Housing Support Won’t last Forever

Lorcan Sirr
Technological University Dublin, lorcan.sirr@tudublin.ie

Follow this and additional works at: https://arrow.tudublin.ie/beschrecmed

Part of the Urban, Community and Regional Planning Commons, and the Urban Studies and Planning Commons

Recommended Citation
WHAT'S THE ANSWER TO DUBLIN'S RENTAL CRISIS?

Our reliance on family for housing support won't last for ever

H
tories is more important than grasping its implications on our relationship with housing. We have a housing/housing relationship with housing in Ireland, one that goes beyond the social organisation of our rich and our property obsession being a post-colonial hangover.

Tenants and residents have no role or voice in setting the rules by which those spaces are paid for or maintained. The financial risk is handled and borne by the landlord, who is not an existential being in the production of the living area.

For us to see the need to build houses, our sense of right, and to do something about it?

We should, and we could, if we were to think about what was at stake.

Our reliance on family for housing support won't last for ever

We have a housing/housing relationship with housing in Ireland, one that goes beyond the social organisation of our rich and our property obsession being a post-colonial hangover.

Tenants and residents have no role or voice in setting the rules by which those spaces are paid for or maintained. The financial risk is handled and borne by the landlord, who is not an existential being in the production of the living area.

For us to see the need to build houses, our sense of right, and to do something about it?

We should, and we could, if we were to think about what was at stake.

Our reliance on family for housing support won't last for ever

We have a housing/housing relationship with housing in Ireland, one that goes beyond the social organisation of our rich and our property obsession being a post-colonial hangover.

Tenants and residents have no role or voice in setting the rules by which those spaces are paid for or maintained. The financial risk is handled and borne by the landlord, who is not an existential being in the production of the living area.

For us to see the need to build houses, our sense of right, and to do something about it?

We should, and we could, if we were to think about what was at stake.

Our reliance on family for housing support won't last for ever

We have a housing/housing relationship with housing in Ireland, one that goes beyond the social organisation of our rich and our property obsession being a post-colonial hangover.

Tenants and residents have no role or voice in setting the rules by which those spaces are paid for or maintained. The financial risk is handled and borne by the landlord, who is not an existential being in the production of the living area.

For us to see the need to build houses, our sense of right, and to do something about it?

We should, and we could, if we were to think about what was at stake.

Our reliance on family for housing support won't last for ever

We have a housing/housing relationship with housing in Ireland, one that goes beyond the social organisation of our rich and our property obsession being a post-colonial hangover.

Tenants and residents have no role or voice in setting the rules by which those spaces are paid for or maintained. The financial risk is handled and borne by the landlord, who is not an existential being in the production of the living area.

For us to see the need to build houses, our sense of right, and to do something about it?

We should, and we could, if we were to think about what was at stake.