Bring Back State-Run Social Housing

Lorcan Sirr

Technological University Dublin, lorcan.sirr@tudublin.ie

Follow this and additional works at: https://arrow.tudublin.ie/beschrecmed

Part of the Urban, Community and Regional Planning Commons, and the Urban Studies and Planning Commons

Recommended Citation

Golf is a sport more conservation than holes of digging, planting, and avoiding bankruptcy in its modern form, yet it is the favorite pastime of the British and Americans. It is played on golf courses, which are maintained by landowners, clubs, or local authorities. Most golf courses are privately owned, but some are public facilities. The courses are designed by architects with golf courses in mind, with carefully selected landscapes and challenging holes.

In recognition of his greatness, Sir Robert Peel founded the first true golf course in 1812 in St. Andrews, Scotland. This led to the establishment of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrews, which is one of the oldest and most prestigious golf clubs in the world. The club's membership has historically been limited to men only, but in 2014, it changed its policy to include women members. This change was seen as a significant move towards gender equality in the sport of golf.

Social housing in the UK has traditionally been provided by local government, but in recent years, there has been a trend towards the private sector taking over this role. The government has introduced policies to encourage the development of affordable housing, and there has been a focus on improving the quality and sustainability of social housing.

In some countries, such as Portugal, social housing is provided through a system of social housing associations. These associations receive funding from the government and are responsible for the development and management of social housing projects. The associations often work with architects and planners to design and build sustainable housing developments.

In conclusion, while golf may seem like a relaxing and leisurely activity, it has a rich history and has played a significant role in the development of modern society. The sport is enjoyed by millions of people around the world, and its popularity continues to grow. Similarly, social housing continues to be a critical issue in many countries, with governments and organizations working to provide affordable and sustainable housing for all.

---

Algarve, €3.79m

A beautiful three-bedroom villa was inspired by Hollywood's golden age. You can imagine a starlet walking a red carpet on the minimalist facade.

Catalonia, €3.1m

This ten-year-old British-style villa is nestled in the rolling countryside. It overlooks the Pacfic, with an impressive 130-metre views.

Sardinia, from €2.15m

The villas are for sale on a private beach that's perfect for a day at the beach. The beachfront villas are on the market in Sardinia, a haven for the wealthy and famous.