... Election Special ... Election Special ... Election Special ... Games Without Frontiers?

A massive DIT wide sports day will take place early next month. It is hoped that as many as a thousand competitors from across the Dublin Institute of Technology will descend upon the Aer Lingus Sports Complex (ALSSA) by Dublin Airport for an event which is designed both as a celebration of sport and an attempt to impress upon the Governing Body and the directors the woeful lack of sports facilities within the institute.

"What we want to do is that day is to invite every sports man and woman in the DIT to the event," says Joe McGrath, the chairperson of the institute's sports committee.

"We would hope to cater for even the more exotic sports, such as fencing and that the people involved would try sports they may not be familiar with, that those who play soccer may try hurling, using a newly developed plastic hurley and divisor. Mr. Jack Bootman, president of the GAA, may attend the event.

"I want to impress on the Governing Body and the directors what we want to achieve in sport in the next four years."

The survey also showed that the level of participation in sport overall is hopelessly low. Only 4.2 per cent of respondents said they took part in sport within the institution only, compared with 42.6 per cent who participate outside college.

The chief problem is simply the lack of funds made available for sport in the institution. "We have limited budgets, it's very rare that a sports club in any centre in the DIT has adequate funding, they're always at the end of the year running out of money. We don't even have control of our own pitches."

Mr McGrath has written a report outlining proposals for increasing the participation in and resourcing of sporting activities within the DIT. It includes proposals for the creation of a dedicated DIT sports facility. According to the report, the minimum requirement for the institute would be: outdoor - two Gaelic pitches, two soccer pitches, one rugby pitch, two all weather pitches for soccer, hockey and training and track facilities. An indoor sports centre with an area of 4,000-5,000sq metres would also be required. Ideally this would include a main sports hall to accommodate various indoor sports, two smaller sports hall, as well as changing facilities, reception and a social area. Mr McGrath estimates that the cost of the facility would run into "double figure millions" However, he is optimistic.

My personal vision is that with the right support we could have the facility built in four years. It would have to be built in stages of course. The first priority is to get playing pitches and the second is to build the main sports facility, which could also be used for conferencing ceremonies, drama festivals and so on. It should be a right for students, rather than a luxury." He describes the new governing body as a "window of opportunity" as far as sport is concerned. "It can be a change from the way the VEC thought of sport, which I think was incidental to other activities.

The two biggest obstacles to this ambitious project are funding and the locating of the facility in an area that is accessible to students in all DIT sites, a somewhat problematical exercise given the physical spread of the institution.

Make Your Mark For DITSU

This Wednesday votes will be cast throughout the DIT for 39 positions in the students' unions. Altogether, there are 64 candidates running for election, highlighting the interest people have in the elections.

There are only two candidates for the position of Overall President, Colman Byrne, the current President, and Ciaran Crobie, the Site President in DIT Kevin Street. It will be a tense day on Wednesday for those two. The day should offer a little less tension for most of the people running for the positions of site presidents. In DIT's Aungier Street, Bolton Street, Cathal Brugha Street, Chatham Row and Mountjoy Square, the candidates for site presidency are running unopposed for re-election. No-one, of course, is taking anything for granted. Only in DIT Kevin Street is there a direct battle, with Reg Gordon, Eats officer, running against Helen Ryan, the current Deputy Site President. The position of Deputy Site President/Welfare Officer is being more hotly contested in most local unions.

The past year has seen the kind of student agitation and interest in current affairs that many thought would never again be part of student life. It is important that this interest and work continue and part of that is getting out on election day and registering a vote. The DIT Examiner urges all DIT students to take to the polls. The candidates have made their effort. Now it's up to you.

... Election Special ... Election Special ... Election Special ...
This Sporting Life

Sport has been dreadfully neglected throughout the DIT for years. Facilities have been and remain, very poor and this is reflected in participation levels as highlighted in the survey conducted by Joe McGrath, chairperson of the institute's sports council. With the freedom allowed by the DIT Act and the formation of a new governing body, there are now opportunities for the development of sporting activities within the DIT that should not be wasted. The first step in this will be to convince the people who control the purse strings that serious investment in sport represents a venture that will benefit not only those directly engaged in sport but also the institute as a whole. Dr Brendan Goldsmith has made it clear that he wants to raise the profile of the DIT and sporting success can be very effective in achieving this. The fact that teams from the various sites will be competing as part of the DIT rather than in local colours must help develop a single identity for the institute.

April 6th then is a very important day in the DIT's sporting calendar for it will provide an opportunity for the likes of Joe McGrath to impress upon the powers that be the importance of sport, the numbers who would take part if proper facilities were provided and, no less significant, the sheer enjoyment of being involved. If the day goes well, it could mark the beginning of a new determination within the DIT to improve the sad state of sporting affairs. The proposed dedicated sports facility will cost a lot of money - no one could argue otherwise - and finding a site acceptable to the North- and South-side locations may well pose problems but if any project is worth pursuing with vigour and commitment, then this is it. Everyone is agreed that something drastic has to be done: the problem will be convincing those with the money that it will be worth the serious financial investment required.

Election Time

It's a nervy time for those running for election. The work required to run a decent and effective campaign is considerable and for some, during the few quiet moments leading up to election day, there will be moments of doubt: is this the right effort? It is. The DIT is undergoing great changes at the moment and DITSU is part of that change, itself developing and also helping to shape changes at institute level. To be part of that change, to resist and campaign where necessary, can be a rewarding and satisfying experience. Sometimes this is forgotten by the people who cast the votes. DITSU does a great deal more than organise events and deal with issues at a local level, though this is integral work. It is important, therefore, that the elections are taken seriously and that people come out and make the effort on election day. It would be unfair to all the candidates if votes were cast on the spur of the moment, without some thought beforehand. Keep an eye out for the manifestos, ask the questions and work out for yourself who is the best person for the job, whatever that may be.

The report states that "ideally the sports centre and field game areas would be on adjacent sites and located in suburban Dublin". At present a team of consultants are looking for a suitable site but even when one is found there is the little matter of money. The current development fund amounts to about £100,000.

"When you look DIT's budget, you're not talking about taking a major percentage of that budget to allocate a half a million a year for sports facilities. We need that kind of money to show banks and other lending institutions that we are serious about the facility and that we can afford the repayments. Whatever way we go about it, we're going to take sports seriously, that's the major objective of the sports committee and the first shot in getting that funding will be the sixth of April. I'll have a plan to run by the Governing Body and the directors and the all the VPs outlining the state of sport in DIT."

Mr McGrath believes that an increase in sporting participation in the DIT would be good for the institute as a whole. He points to the introduction of DIT jerseys for major sports.

"I think sport could be very unifying for the DIT, people will think of themselves as DIT players rather than Anngier Street players or whatever. We'll be getting posters and pennants to give to opposition players next year. If we start doing well, the DIT will be appearing in the papers and the TV and so on and that is in the interests of the institution as a whole."

Showing Initiative

This year's Irish Student Film Initiative (ISFI) took place at the Dublin Institute of Technology, Aungier Street. Both Trinity College and University College Dublin have played host to the Festival on previous occasions.

The festival was set up in 1992 by the UCD film society as a forum for film makers to show their work to fellow students and to people working in the audio-visual industry.

Students from University College Cork, UCD, University of Limerick, Limerick College of Art and Design and Coláiste Dhulaigh were amongst those featured in the festival.

Gail Haslam, this year's Initiative director, herself and communications' student and film society organiser in TCD Aungier Street, believes that the festival offers students the opportunity to have their work viewed by an unknown audience, including a judging panel of people from the film industry.

According to Gail, the response from students was positive, with over 40 films submitted for entry to the competition. One such film was "Kissogram" produced and directed by Pat Hannon, an ex-drama director, herself and communications' student from DIT Aungier Street, now working part-time in the Communications Department and with local radio.

With an interest in documentary film "Kissogram" tells the story of Toni and Paul who perform kissograms. Pat wanted to create a fly on the wall effect, travelling with the performers on calls with a hand held camera. His aim was to investigate behind the scenes of the 'fate and fortune of the scantily-clad French maid and Tarzan'.

Prizes were also awarded to Jim Mannix from UCC for "Talking to God on the Carraghne Straight" and to the Young Irish Film Makers from Kilkenny for "Dog".

The festival also included the screening of films not in the competition. One such film was "Search for X" which documents a student's mission to investigate behind the scenes of the 'fate and fortune of the scantily-clad French maid and Tarzan'.

Paul Clarke of SIPTU expressed positive sentiments regarding the student film Initiative and said he would like to see an involvement by RTE in the Initiative in the future as "the students of today are the workers of tomorrow".

To ensure the continuance of the Initiative from year to year, it is organised that members of the host college from one year become members of the steering committee the next.

UCG is due to host next year's Student Film Initiative and it is hoped that even more colleges will be involved. Anyone interested in further information on the ISFI can contact Gail Haslam c/o of the Students' Union, DIT Aungier Street.

Throwing Muses - The Tivoli

I arrived rickety at midnite where there was ne'er a soul in sight! Complete sell-out! After an anguishing wait during which time the queue of other desperate hopefuls waned and were turned away with a "Not a hope!", I met this bloke with a plan...

Touring University with two of the original Muses and an additional keyboard player, Kristin Hirsch is back with a mellow bang. Last time I saw K. Hirsch she was sitting atop a table in Tower Records (pre-holocaust) talking about her kid and bunny rabbits, doing a promo for Hips & Makers. I liked the solo stuff but ached at the thought that the Muses had been thrown. The very 'in' form University (which was actually recorded at the same time as Hips and Makers) happily dispelled this illusion. This from a band who like to play what they like to play and who were on the scene long before The Pixies et al are out of recording supplies. On stage, this is a cool cookie in 5th gear. No affected rock stars here, just a band doing their job well, churning out great songs all the way into the second encore. "Have you guys nothing better to do?" was the response to the calls for more... "Good, cos neither do we!" Temp down for the final numbers and home. (what was the plan? - Ed)

Heineken Rollercoaster - The Ormonde Multimedia Complex

Not as full as one might have reckoned for such bill toppers. The Ormonde is an odd kind of venue, with unfriendly acoustics. How much does Dave Danning actually get paid for his spectacular guest host appearance? And what was the purpose of that mutating Technicolor globule on the wall? Little Sister Sage kicked off the ride to warm up the valves for Mike TV. Longford spring band (ahem, young D. Byrne shirt and haido) who in accordance with the media attention actually have a good bundle of songs tucked into their guitars (what was that one about being born in a launderette?) Moneyboat is the title of their current EP on Hunter S Records to whom they recently signed. Next up were Georgia, who are a JFM drive time friendly band from up North with a few nice tunes via Technological Bridge to Your Heart (a song about a by-pass op., no doubt) but not much to shake the foundations.

The real event of the night for many was The Frames, DC who that day released their single Revelate (v. cheap too, go buy!). The experience lacking in many other bands shines through in Glen Hansard and company's songs and delivery. From the "oldest song in the world" (Glen) The Dancer, to the anthem-like Attempts at bravery are encouraged by screaming. Lucie, the only female character in the cast, embodies the role of the maternal comforter, as she strokes the head of Francois as he laments his fear of the unknown ahead. Crochet the interrogator takes great pleasure causing pain and utter degradation to his victims, he wraps his arms around Henri's shoulders, in an aggressive yet intimate manner, and kisses him on the lips, causing Henri to scream and spit in disgust.

The play is well directed by Brian de Salvo and a tremendous sense of claustrophobia and despair is created by the sparse, dull prison setting and the bedraggled, dazed characters.

Choice is at the heart of Sartre's existentialism. Man is nothing at birth and throughout his life he is no more than the sum of his past commitments. Existentialist anguish is the acknowledgement that man is condemned to freedom. He cannot escape choosing.

"Men Without Chains" explores the effect of the human condition out of control of its own destiny. The Nazi occupation presents limits to personal freedom, leaving man cruelly condemned to despair.

Sartre joined the French army in 1939 and was taken prisoner by the Germans in 1941. After his release, he became an active member of the resistance in his native Paris. Sartre. Other plays: "Les Mouches" and "Huis Clos" also dealt with the Nazi occupation.

Fascinating Aida - The Olympia

Bittersweet E.A. Dillin, Isy and Adele played to an audience of devotees. I did happen to notice a disproportionate number of women who would if only they were braver. Poking fun at themselves and others in their tyrannical wit and satire which veers from the men crisis ... "Back With You, "oh why the Hell did I go..." through Let's Go to Hotel, about illicit lunch time affairs, to Genetic Mutation, a song about giving birth to a two headed baby at 108. Dille and Tom Watte would stage the most perfect cabaret ensemble conceivable. Isy, the new addition, has a litany of facial expressions that are infectious and Adele has a voice which a male cabaret artist friend envied at both ends of the range! Well adapted set which incorporated localised gags and verses ranging from Brown T's move to Moore Street traders. An hilarious romp.

Living in the Shadowlands

"Men Without Shadows" by Jean-Paul Sartre, at the Focus Theatre, explores the sense of hopelessness against the background of Nazi occupied France.

It is set at the plateau of Vercors in late July 1944. The play opens with a group of resistance fighters, held captive by the Vichy police, as they await their forthcoming interrogation. The play cuts between the prison cell and the interrogation room. The agonising wait of the prisoners in the cell is set in sharp contrast to the wine consumption and maniacal laughter of the police in the next room.

The utter futility of the prisoners' situation is highlighted by the vain hopes of loyalty to Jean, whom they will not betray to the police. They are prepared to suffer pain and torture for the sake of their loyalty. But when one of the prisoners threatens to betray the group loyalty, his most dreaded doom is brutally realised.

Amidst the fear and despair, fellowship develops among the prisoners as they try to maintain a sense of hope among themselves.
The Price Was Right

The filming of a popular game show in America in the late 1950s and the subsequent Congressional investigation into the events surrounding the deception may not have sounded like the most promising pitch for a film. At least some of the audience would know how it turns out, so the suspense value is absent. What about catalytic re-imaginings? Nah. A feel-good factor? Nope: some sex, surely? Sorry.

So what's left, for money's sake? Actually, what's left is a film that I have already marked down as one of the best of the year, because from this story, deeper and darker than it sounds, Robert Redford has fashioned a compelling, remarkably gripping film that speaks volumes for the power of television, the lure of dreamed of riches and the weakness in will raise considerably his standing in American society to succeed. Somehow. In something.

The film opens with the camera lingering over one of the enduring symbols of material success: a shining, new and expensive car. It is being admired by Dick Goodwin, a young, aggressive Congressional investigator, top of his class in Harvard as he tells anyone who cares to be impressed. He is a man who will later get his teeth into the case, determined to get to the truth, and if it makes a name for him in the process, well boy, these things happen.

We are then shown the nation sett-ling down in front of the TV for NBC's "Twenty One": a show in which two contestants stand in booths and answer questions for ever increasing amounts of money. The sequence is designed to illustrate just how many people watched this show, and how important it was in their weekly routine. They watched in millions and they trusted.

Long time champion is Herb Stempel, a pushy know it all whose life has become defined by his success. Not only does he have money, he is also famous and it is the recognition as has always fed on that need to be seen, to be recognized. To be liked.

Quiz Show is Robert Redford's best directorial effort to date. Ordinary. People won him an Oscar first time out, but this is a more complex film and one that is just as involving without the support of great tragedy that beset the characters in the former film. Redford directs without fuss or frills, allowing the witty and thoughtful script and a number of fine performances to do the work. Stempel is played by John Turturro as a twentysomething dazzling character and though he was in a way hard done by, it is difficult to feel sorry for him. Though a powerful performance, it is a weakness in the film; it is, however, by Van Doren's character. Ralph Fiennes looks and sounds every inch the privileged WASP intellectual, the fresh good looks and stylish manner complemented by a beautifully modulated voice (think of Tom Conti without the sardonic lilt). But he is just as weak and eager to be liked as Stempel, though in Van Doren's case, it is the respect of his poet father (Paul Scofield giving a performance of quiet and dangerous dignity) that he seeks. It is a measured, though not mannered performance by Fiennes, one that will raise considerably his standing in Hollywood.

The film looks great and there are some exciting enough scenes of white water rafting but aside from that there's not much to shout about. Competent entertainment.

The Shawshank Redemption

When softly spoken banker Andy Dufresne is sentenced to the brutal Shawshank Prison for the murder of his wife, his life seems to be at an end. Even the wisest and most wily of cons, thinks it is so. But Andy has a reservoir of hope and quiet determination miles deep, one that cannot be touched by the brutal prison system. He adapts to the cruelty and the randomness and surprises everyone, audience included.

The Shawshank Redemption has all the old prison cliches, is shamelessly old fashioned, ultimately incredible and about 20 minutes overlong. But it works beautifully - the script is intelligent and quietly insistent and the acting by the two leads (Tim Robbins as Andy and Morgan Freeman as Red) is outstanding. Director/screenwriter Frank Darabont displays the light touch of a man confident in the material and so the film, while occasionally very tough, doesn't employ the big stick for audience reaction. A really fine and uplifting piece of work.
Once more into the

And so those who can still operate their limbs and are pointed in the right direction bid a fond and fragile farewell to rag weeks 1995. All over the DIT, you can see them, zombified, lost little things wandering the city searching, ever searching for the multitudinous brain and liver cells that have been lost along the way. Others furtively ask passers by have they seen any lost dignity in the vicinity. In both cases, the word on advice is forget it. They're gone. Gone forever.

By all accounts, drunk and sober, the respective DIT rag weeks were a howling, dribbling success. Sure, there were hiccups along the way, there always are, but fortunately, very few were of the metaphorical variety. DIT Aungier Street was the first to embrace the annual event which is in aid of charity but is usually dedicated to Bacchus. DIT Kevin Street was the last and in the three weeks bookended by those two there were sights to be seen, and sounds to be heard; we won't see their like again. Until next year.

The DIT Examiner proudly presents for your patient perusal a selection of photos which we hope will give a flavour of what it was like to be involved in the high kickin', foot stompin', beer swilling, dignity crushing event that was rag week across the DIT in this year of our Lord, 1995.

No laughing matter: Serious competition during Crazy Night
It's Election Week in DITSU. There are many positions being contested but the most high profile is that of overall president of DITSU, currently held by Colman. The DIT Examiner spoke with both Mr Byrne, who is running for re-election, and his challenger for the position, Ciarán Crosbie. They give their views on the year, plans for the future and what they hope to achieve. In this election special, we also present a complete list of every candidate and position being contested.

The Time For Change Is Now

Ciarán Crosbie is the only challenger to the current Overall President of DITSU in this year's elections. He is currently the site president in DIT Kevin Street. No one could argue against the assertion that they are two very different candidates, different in style, manner and of course, views on the previous year.

Ciarán concedes that it has been a "fairly good year for DITSU" but adds "I don't think everything was done that could have been done. There are several major problems facing DITSU, facing the DIT, that have to be addressed, the biggest being semesterisation and the introduction of faculty structures. Both will have serious effects on students, as well as students' unions. DITSU has to come out with a policy on these two which we don't have now, so it is going to be a challenge. We have to come out with a stance on faculty structures and semesterisation in consultation with the students and if I was elected I'd see that as being my main job for next year, formulating that policy of what the students want."

He does not agree with the semesterisation system as it stands, but would not condemn it outright.

"The theory behind semesterisation is good, instead of having one huge exam load, it is split into two and that's all well and good, but unfortunately instead of splitting the exam load, it doubles it. For semesterisation to work properly, it has run hand in hand with modularisation."

An argument can be made that there was so much going on, at a day to day level, and with matters arising out of the blue, that some things had to go on the back burner, so to speak. Ciarán Crosbie sees it somewhat differently.

"The job of the overall presidency is there to see the big picture, not to be involved in the day to day running of a union. He or she should be able to leave that to the local sit presidents and the local executives." He believes the DITSU president should be looking at the long term issues, those that will affect students in five or 10 years time.

It is important, he says later, that the overall president keep in mind that the local sabbaticals run the local union and that a balance has to be struck "between being seen in the college and being seen so much that people think you are the local sabbatical rather than the site president."

The current president of DITSU has experience in the area and is involved with a number of committees helping direct the future of the institute; he is campaigning strongly on this fact. Mr Crosbie has not, at the highest levels, such experience. Surely, this is not in his favour!

"Well I've been here for two years, a year as deputy and this year as president. I don't think that the argument about having experience of dealing with the top boys hods water. I've been dealing with them for the last two years and I would not be intimidated by going into a meeting with 30 suits."

He adds that he deals daily with heads of departments and is currently sitting on a DIT committee dealing with the thorny issue of semesterisation.

"I think people should vote for us on the policies we present, the past work we've done rather than a manifesto saying 'I've been there and I know what I'm doing, vote for me again. That's not necessarily the case.'"

There are those who would argue that the job of DITSU President is so very different from that of site president that some concessions should be made in terms of appearance.

"To be honest I don't wear suits and ties. I never found it a problem dealing with top men here. In a way I think it's pandering to them, because I'm a student. I don't see many students wearing suits and ties. I don't want to say that there's anything wrong with it but if I go into a meeting of 15 people and we're all wearing suits then I don't stand out from anyone. It's important that a student representative does."

He believes that image counts for the first 10 seconds. "After that it's up to yourself; what comes out of your mouth. If you can say the right thing at a meeting and represent the students properly, people will respect you regardless of what you're wearing."

The change from site president to DITSU president is a big one; responsibilities change as do working styles. It can be a difficult transition for a person used to a set location but it is a vital one.

"That's a problem altogether. I think it's very easy to fall into the trap of being the amicable, friendly president who's always around the colleges but the fact is that the work has to be done and if you spend too much time being around the colleges, you run the risk of letting work slip by. If elected, he proposes to visit a college a day for two or three hours. This would be a tough schedule, but no less tough than the next couple of days as the election campaign reaches..."
Continuity is the Key

Colman Byrne is the current Overall President of DITSU. The fact that he is running for re-election is not surprising. It has after all been a busy and exciting year for the students' unions and for the DIT in general; it's a good time to be involved. Mr Byrne has said in the past that he would like to pursue a career in politics and so his current job is at the very least, valuable experience. Some will say he's had his year, others that a degree of continuity is vital for the work of the students' union. Why does he think people should vote again for him?

"The saying goes that if something isn't broke you don't fix it and this is far from broke so you shouldn't go messing with it," he elaborates.

The simple fact is that we've come a long way this year, got a lot of things underway. Things are in our grasp that always seemed dreamlike. We're still talking about them but they are about to happen. The executive is working better, each individual union in the college has had a better year than it has had in a good few years, on all fronts - the strikes in Aungier Street and Cathal Brugha Street were very impressive, we've had a good year and I'd like to think I played a fairly large part in that.

He points to the impending increase from one to three and the number of student representatives on academic council.

"People will say that was going to happen anyway but there have been lots of things that have happened so far that put that down, to raise the ratio of staff to students on it which is a key issue in the development of the identity of the DIT, the improvement of medical facilities, finding a permanent home for DIT's music students and keeping a close eye on the faculty structures."

If it all goes badly for him, though, he would be happy with his year's work.

"I wouldn't be happy enough with my year. We have accomplished a lot, I could be proud of my year but not totally, but for me there's a certain amount of stuff that I want to get done and I haven't got it all done because other things have come up. Now those things that arose and took up my time have been good things, but if I didn't get re-elected I wouldn't be sure that those things would get through. And contingency plans."

"I have no plans but I'm sure I'll struggle on."

2. What do you intend to do if elected?

5. What particular qualities would you bring to the job of
6. What do you think of your opponent?

DIT Angrier Street
Sinéad Pidgeon
Position Contested: Deputy Site President/Welfare Officer
The main reason I am running for election this year is because I am very interested in the welfare of all students in the DIT. My main priorities would be the enhancement of student benefits in the college, whether this be by introduction of a welfare magazine, a welfare stand containing all necessary information put up in the main area of the college and the necessary appointment of a resident doctor in the college.
I also intend to ensure that accommodation for all students living away from home and the introduction of childcare facilities in the college. Finance-wise, I intend to ensure swift payment of grants at all time. The most important aspects of my qualities would be by far my truly dedicated, very ambitious and 100 per cent behind all needs and desires of students regarding welfare.
For these reasons I believe I am one of the most suitable person for the job. I intend to do everything possible to ensure that this is the most successful year regarding student welfare in the college.

Dan Wade
Position Contested: Site President
1. Unfinished work. The move in itself was a very large change. It’s time we get back to basics And bring back what was best in Rathmines down to Angrier Street. I feel that this year’s most experienced person on the ext. I should do that job.
2. First and foremost, I would like a proper first year orientation programme. As it is now, we would be dependent on the class rep system which I feel is completely unsatisfactory.
3. I suppose that as it is a plebeian, I could say that I am the only man for the job. However, in reality I think people realise that I have put in the hours and I have done the work.

DIT Kevin Street
Helen Ryan
Position Contested: Site President
1. Last year I was welfare officer and it was a very productive year and this year I intend to work on developing the image of DIT through class reps system, meetings and publications and also on the areas of education and entertainments. The only point is, where do I fit it all in? I am Site President.
2. I will do is elected... Starting from mid-July, I would propose to begin work in class rep training, so at the start of term, most of the work for that has been done and this event can occur early.

The education must be made a priority and students must be told their rights and procedures for appeals and representation of a resident doctor in the college. I would like to see improved communication between the SU and the President. Ents needs student output and I would set up an ents committee to ensure close monitoring of events. Main priorities (besides above) is making the student more interested in the SU, the place where £55 goes to (or of it in some sense).
Because I can do a good job, my track record has been proven over the past 2/3 years of two years in Clubs and Societies and Subbannical Welfare Officer, and I feel I can make a difference. A vote for me is a vote for dedication, commitment and change. Students should vote for me because they will know who the SU is and what the SU does.
I am a dedicated and committed to the SU movement and I believe the way forward is with all students behind us. I have adequate experience for the job. I can show leadership and can delegate well. I feel that I am honest, friendly and with these I can communicate with the student body well.
My opponent is a co-worker and very competent. It’s a shame we are running against each other. I’d like to see him involved in some way. May the best person win (that’s democracy!)

Reg Gordon
Position Contested: Site President
1. I have been involved in the SU for two years, this year as ents officer. I feel I have gained enough experience to enable me to do a good job as president.
2. If elected I intend to ensure that every student knows exactly what the union is doing, through The Voice and regular union meetings. I will continue and expand upon the class rep system which was started this year. I will introduce recycling into the union and try to introduce it into the college.
3. As ents officer, I learned many of the traits which make a good president, eg. diplomacy (dealing with promoters) tact and leadership skills.
4. I am honest, hardworking (God, this sounds like a job application). I’ll get things done.
5. Having worked with Helen last year, I feel she would do a good job. However, I’d do better!

DIT Mountjoy Square
Mark Lee
Position Contested: Site President
1. With a year’s sabatical experience under my belt, I can (a) give guidance to the new exec, showing them the pitfalls of the job and pointing out the major areas that need to be tackled and (b) use the relationships built up in the last year with students, college and DIT management to tackle the problems and exploit the opportunities arising in the current year.
2. I would continue to represent the students of DIT and in particular the students of COMAD on DIT student services council where this year I placed a record funding of £20,000 extra for DITSU, £30,000 extra for student welfare and £10,000 for student sports.
3. I would make every effort to improve the working environment overall and in particular in one of the college’s annexes where students are exposed to poisonous gases in one of the sculpture studios.
4. Bring recycling to the fore-front. The level of waste ranging from overuse of paper in the computer rooms in the college to the plastic spoons in the canteen, is unacceptable, on an extremely practical level which would involve placing bins throughout that college exclusively for recyclable materials.
5. Because I have proved I am capable of meeting the challenges of a sabatical position, I have done my level best as Vice President/welfare officer, and will do equally as much work and more as President.

Niamh Donovan
1. I am running from election this year because I have been in COMAD for three years and I appreciate and admire the work of the students’ union in the past. I feel I can contribute to the union and would like to take an active role speaking on behalf of students and striving to obtain their rights. I would enjoy work with the union and would obtain invaluable experience.
2. If elected I intend to be one hundred percent dedicated to the position and actively fight for the desires and needs of students in my college. I would like to see college facilities improved especially the introduction of colour copiers, photocopying, improved library facilities, introduction of a first aid/stock room for students. I will also, as student welfare officer, be available to all students in all areas of our college and obtain adequate funds to aid needy students.
3. I think people would vote for me as I feel I am the best run for the job. I have always been a "people person" and I think this is an important quality to have as deputy president/welfare officer. I am willing to work hard for the students in my college and students in general and I will go to extremes to obtain what we as students deserve.
4. I am approachable, willing to listen, and never afraid to voice my opinion. I can be firm but fair and I strive to maintain a balance in these qualities and these are essential requirements for the position of welfare officer/deputy president in my eyes. I am also hard working, dedicated, and have...
believe her interest is only skin deep due to even though my opponent holds a part-time winning the position but since he is only in represent students with more experience undoubtedly stand by me.

Bella Montgomery Position contested: Welfare Officer/Deputy Site President

I am running for election this year because I have a number of goals to fulfill, which will help to better lines of COMAD students as a whole.

2. Look after the annexes in particular, provide a comprehensive welfare service, day and night, for the union.

3. Because I have an abundance of experience, particularly in welfare, as I was anti-discrimination and equal rights officer.

4. Maturity, personality, hard worker, experience, friendliness, professionalism, dedication, enthusiasm.

She's got a good effort, but I believe her interest is only skin deep due to her decision on 4.53 on Tuesday to take the part.

Colin Joyce Position contested: Site President

1. The main reason I am running for election this year is because I feel that I haven't completed the changes that I wished to implement. I want to see a continuation of the present high level of best available to the students. If elected, my main points will be (a) to develop and maintain student welfare facilities where and to tackle any student problems which may arise during the year, (b) to expand and create more student entertain- ment throughout the year. Furthermore, to develop new and exciting alternative activities, (c) I hope to improve the relations system between the student union, students, apprentices and between Bolton St and other DIT constituencies, (d) I will continue the canteen survey, address the security problems and the whole area of student grants.

2. My main priority is to try and get along well with my colleagues available in the company. It's a small world and will only come into being through intense lobbying to the authorities of the Department of Education. Also the establishment of monthly class rep meetings and bi-monthly OCM.

3. Because there's no one else. Ah, no seriously, I believe that I have a lot of ideas and energy to put into the job. I don't believe that one year was enough and I don't believe the student body has fully unit-ed and shook of the shackles of the inter-collegital rivalry.

A nice beard, open arms and a big merry-smile.

Patricia Moran Position contested: Deputy President/Welfare Officer

I have always been interested in the activities of CBS and I feel that by running in first year, I will have the opportunity to put my ideas into practice. Also the entire courses of Cathal Brugha Street are very poorly represented within the student body and I feel they are being neglected. They need a voice within the students' union - that voice is me. This is my second year in CBS and having heard the grievances of fellow students, I feel this is the most opportune time for me to run as deputy president as possible.

1. The establishment of a much needed bank within Cathal Brugha Street, completion of the annexes creche on a DIT, include CBS students attending Rathmines and Cabra to all issues of CBS life, a more detailed accommodation list for the students of CBS.

3. The Deputy President has a special responsibility for the annexes. Being a member of the school of environmental health I myself have had classes in all the annexes and also in Kevin Street. I personally know the problems within the annexes. Like many of the science courses, Environmental health was hugely affected by the move to Rathmines and can sympathise with other students.

The deputy president has a major role to play in women's affairs. Therefore I feel a female with a woman's perspective on women's issues is the right candidate for the position. I am a diligent, reliable, enthusiastic type of person as was evident during rag work.

4. I have a genuine interest in the jobs that are going to be done and I am a committed, open-minded person. If elected I will approach the job with the utmost dedication and enthusiasm and put my best to make the students feel satisfied.

5. I am a gentle person with many fine human qualities. However, I feel he is not the right person for the job. His objectives are very vague and he seems to be afraid to commit himself. Also he does not have the experience that I have in relation to the annexes, also in relation to women's affairs. I feel I am the more capable candidate for the job.

Bob Coghlan Position contested: Site Deputy President/Welfare Officer

I am running for election this year because I feel that I can contribute to the year by running the union and the welfare of the students. If elected, my main concern will be to give the members their money, and use this example, to tackle any problems that may arise during the year, (a) I feel I am an approachable person as was evident during rag work.

A student representative will be appoint- ed in Rathmines (probably the head of the students in the annexes) and I will liaise with the exact basis. I intend to develop the class rep system in both Rathmines and Cathal Brugha Street. Welfare clinics will be on a twice weekly basis and I will be in Rathmines one or two afternoons a week.

DIT Bolton Street

Alian Hanagan Position contested: Site President

I have worked alongside Ronan in all the campaigns this year, for example we started a campaign to try to improve facilities in the canteen and although some progress has been made, we haven't finished. I think I can follow through on the campaigns until next year and see the development through. We've also started a student's clubs and I'd like to see a support policy implemented for a student who has a disability or learning disability. Also I feel that I will be able to do justice to the student body in all aspects of student life.

2. As the position is for the deputy presi- dent and welfare officer, my priorities will be twofold. As deputy President I will work closely with the president on all campaigns and try to encourage all the students to improve of canteen facilities. Also I will strive to increase communication between DITSU, the students' union and the college body. As welfare officer, my main priorities are (1) fully informing the students on the availability of grants and the education section, (2) to have a significant effect on the student body, (2) to increase student awareness of the many health issues prevailing in the student com- munity. If I am elected I will work to do the best of my abilities to achieve these goals.

3. Currently I am a fourth year property economics student and over the years I have worked closely with the students' union and thus have a wide ranging knowledge of the day to day running. Also I feel that I am open minded, friendly, approachable and love dealing with people which if I am elected, will be beneficial to the student body.

4. If I am elected I will work very hard in the post in an honest, open mind and friendly manner and also to fulfill and exceed the role in which the present person has had in the constitution. I feel I am very equipped to fill the post in a very personal manner.

5. As for my opponents, I am a member of Bolton St committee and I have achieved what I set out to do. I also feel I am the more capable candidate for the job.

I have built up with members of the student body as a result of my involvement with the above clubs and societies. Becoming deputy site president and welfare officer demands a very personal touch as natural and student and politics, to fulfil as confident as possible and I know I possess these essential qualifications, and I have no doubt that I am thoroughly confident for this post. Well, the dilemma lies with the immin- ent voters. for I too am aware of my oppo- nents' abilities. However, frankly, I feel that the qualities I would bring to this job out-weigh my opponents' on a more personal and genuine level.

Colin Costello Position contested: Site Deputy President/Welfare Officer

I am running for election this year on the basis that I feel I will be able to do justice to the student body in all aspects of student life.

1. I am interested in politics and have achieved what I set out to do. I also feel I am the more capable candidate for the position.

2. I feel I am the more capable candidate for the job.
Almost killed someone last week. Oh, I know that sounds like nothing so much as attention-seeking exaggeration, the kind of pathetic posturing beloved of Chris Eubank and his ilk - I'll bet you didn't know he kept pets - and it is to a point, a very small point. For it is a true, if wildly open, statement. I'm pretty sure the intended victim wasn't even aware of the danger in which he was placing his life by his actions, poor lamb, but that merely renews in me the desire to end his useless existence. What unspeakable crime was this man committing? What caused such feelings of murderous passion to ensnare my heart? Exactly this (brace yourself): he was talking in the cinema.

Before you being to scoff, either metaphorically, or with a big cake out of boredom, bear with me. It was not only the fact that he was talking in the saccucen temple of the moving picture, though this is in itself a crime which should carry a punishment similar to that meted out for thievery in some middle eastern countries; rather, it was what he was saying that caused me to seriously consider inserting my umbrella into his mouth and repeatedly opening and closing it until he breathed no more.

Going to the cinema is still a wonderful experience, an event, especially in the afternoon. The reasonable pre-five o'clock price, the comforting rattle of a bag of popcorn purchased before you go in - thus avoiding the extortion posing as a confectionary stand in the lobby - the sense of expectation, and all this before you see, and any encroachment upon this blissful scenario is surely to be opposed most stridently. With all this in mind, I now see that last week someone was very lucky indeed.

It began, innocently enough, in the foyer, as the extortion posing as a confectionary stand in the lobby. And as he triumphantly wound up the arm rest from my seat so as to beat him to bloody death...

What amazed me about entire episode was that no-one said anything. No one leaned over or back or came from the building next door and politely informed my seat and hide in the foam. And the swine, ignoring my obvious discomfort, simply couldn't: the behaviour of Mr Super Memory was so incredible, so dull, irritating and nauseating at the same time that I was completely unable to respond.

...the behaviour of Mr Super Memory was so incredible, so dull, irritating and nauseating as the same time that I was completely unable to respond.

stopped there, I could have recovered easily and got on with my life. But no. He kept it up, developing a new line of self-aggrandisement from an innocuous comment made by one of his guileless companions about The Silence of the Lambs and thus introducing me to a whole new level of horror.

"Oh, I've seen that. You know what the best lines in that film are?"

 Needless to say, his companions did not get a chance to say "no" or "what?" or "shut up". Without drawing breath he launched into a scene from the film, quoting Lecter and even trying to mimic his accent. It went on for the entire walk up the steps to the cinema and at every turn I kept wishing the good doctor would appear and take great and violent exception to the performance. He didn't and his friends, whose embarrassed faces were dangerously near to setting fire to my hair, said nothing. I, on the other hand, was beginning to lose it. "Let him be", I consoled myself, "it's a big theatre, hundreds of seats, he'll be miles away. Relax. Enjoy the film." So he sat behind me.

I know this not because I looked but because he was still talking.

"I have a great memory. You know what? I can name every single American president in order, in about 26 seconds. You wanna hear me do it?" 26 seconds. He timed it.

Once again his friends were slow off the mark, to slow to stop him, to law abiding to stamp on his head. He may well have listed off all the Presidents of the United States but I couldn't really tell, my concentra-ion being taken up by my attempts to actually get into my seat and hide in the foam. And the swine, ignoring my obvious discomfort - I was also whimpering - continued to drone on.

Now, normally when people disturb my reverie in a cinema, I can spin in my seat (this alone often gets their attention if I do it enough times), fix them with a steely eye, and request that they please 'shut up' or 'put out that cigarette' or 'stop having sex in the seat behind me' - things like that. Why didn't I do so in this case? I simply couldn't: the behaviour of Mr Super Memory was so incredible, so dull, irritating and nauseating at the same time that I was completely unable to respond. Besides, by the time he got to Calvin Coolidge, I was busy trying to break off the arm rest from my seat so as to beat him to bloody death...

The voice belonged to a woman, an American. It came from right behind me.

"Well, you won't be seeing it with me. The reply came from a male, also American. And if ever there was a statement begging a question, that was it. This guy wanted his companions to ask him why he wouldn't be seeing the aforementioned flick. It's an old, reprehensible trick. And they fell for it.

"Why?" And he was off and running. As I should have been.

"Well, you know about my recurring vampire dream..." Other people's dreams are always boring. Always, always, always. No wonder Freud took coke. This guy was no different. I won't go into his deranged rubbish here, but suffice it to say that I was soon hoping his dream would come true. But if he'd
Flour Power

When the ransom demand was released, there was talk of calling in the professionals. The fact that in this particular kidnap situation the professionals would have been a team of crack bakers (the mind boggles) seemed to phase no-one. The demand came in time honoured style, cut out from newspaper headlines, and carried a threat that the child would be turned into a big cake if demands were not met.

All over DIT Aungier Street, anxious parents clutched their bags of flour to their chests, murmuring reassurances, eyes darting left and right, watching for danger.

It is a situation that was repeated throughout the DIT over the past three weeks - both the carrying of bags of flour and the kidnapping. Participating students were given a bag of flour to look after for a week, treating it at all times with the reverence and love usually afforded small babies.

It was organised to highlight the lack of child care facilities in the DIT. There is a creche fund which runs to a maximum of £30 a week, but according to Helen Ryan, Deputy Site President and Welfare Officer in DIT, this is insufficient.

"It's means tested, and the single parent's allowance, rent allowance and the grant is taken into consideration." She points out that a creche could cost between £60-80 a week.

The point of the exercise was to raise awareness among the students of the DIT that there may be people in college who have babies and who are finding it very difficult to manage. They can't bring the child to college and might have to pay whatever amount for a creche. Also there are maybe people in college who are pregnant and who are going to experience these difficulties in college - there are no facilities for maternity leave if the give birth coming up to exams. Thirdly, it was designed to highlight the fact that we might be discriminating against people who have children because there are no facilities.

She accepts that the process will be a slow one and that it will cost a considerable amount of money. At the moment, along with the flour campaign, DITSU is collecting signatures - about 1,000 per site is the aim - and when enough have been collected, a detailed proposal for creche facilities will be presented to Dr Brendan Goldsmith, President of the DIT.

Earth Watch

The opening night of the Environmental Resource Management-society took place on February 2nd in Rathmines House.

Guest speakers were Eamonn de Butler (t) and Susan Moles. Both speakers provided a slide show and this was followed by a wine and cheese reception, which itself was followed by a trip to the Station Bar where a fine night was had by all.

The Society is currently studying the possibility of recycling facilities throughout the DIT. A careers seminar is planned along with a number of other environmental projects.

Chairperson John Clarke would like to thank all those who made this highly successful evening a possibility.

Society Committee: John Clarke - chairperson, Tanya White - Treasurer, Tiernan Humphreys - Secretary, Seán Crowley - PRO.
What's goin' on in Mountjoy Sq.

Rag Week:
This year's Rag Week was a resounding success, with all profits going to the Temple Street Children's Hospital. The overall attendance was up on last year's events - especially the boat race competition, which had the highest attendance in three years.

Thanks to the Iarnród Éireann, the Rag Train was a no go this year, so the ever enterprising SU and entertainments committee organised the highly successful DARE crawl instead. Wednesday night saw the Rag Ball in Powers Hotel where 800 students danced the night away to their hearts' content.

The week was without hassle nor trouble and will be a hard act to follow next year (Rag Week t-shirts are still on sale in the SU shop, price £3.50)

Dress Dance
The annual dress dance takes place this year in the Country Club. Portmarnock, on Friday, April 7th. Tickets cost £25 and there is a payments instalment system in operation (full payment by March 31st). There will be a bar extension until 3.30am and the final curtain is at 6.30am. Should ensure a good night for those with staying powers.

Fashion Show
March 2 saw the staging of the annual DIT Mountjoy Square Fashion Show. This year's show, held in the Royal Hospital, Kilmainham, was hosted by Head to Toe Martin Raymond. Designers on show included student from NCAD, Kelvin Feeney (this year's Smirnoff Irish Designer) and Wendy Hoey (former Smirnoff winner) .

All shoes were from Korky and DV8 and retail outlets on show included Club Tricof, American Madness, River Island and McKullas. Model Lisa Cummins helped with the co-ordination of the show. All praise to fashion society head Olivia Moranah and her team for an excellent show. Afterwards everyone headed to Pegg Woffington's for a drink, a bop and of course plenty of mingling, darling, essential mingling!

DIT Mountjoy Square's Art Society exhibited their work in the Irish Life Centre. The exhibition ran for two weeks and was praised and adored by all.

DIT Mountjoy Square's basketball is proving to be the best of the best. They are now champions of the North Division of Irish College Basketball League. They are currently training hard in preparation for the Irish finals. Best of luck from all in DIT Mountjoy Square.

The DIT Swimming team has had its most successful year ever. At the Irish Swimming and Water polo Intervarsities, they were just beaten by the overall winners position by Queen's University Belfast. At the recent HEST championships, both the DIT A & B teams cleaned up, winning all but four titles, resulting in overall first and second placings for the teams.

DIT Mountjoy Square's judo club headed off the Irish Judo Intervarsities and a prodigy, Connell Brennan, returned. He excelled, taking the 80 kg title and also lifted the award for the best throw of the competition.
